Adam Schomer

Co-producer of the feature documentary HEAL, Adam Schomer is a documentary writer, producer and director, known for going to extreme lengths and interesting places in order to follow heroic stores as his work brings insight into important issues and ourselves.

His award winning film The Highest Pass (2012) was theatrically released and took a deep look at fear and death amidst an epic Himalayan motorcycle adventure. Shortly after, he produced and directed the feature documentary The Polygon (2014) and explored the villages most affected by forty years of Soviet nuclear testing. He also wrote, produced and directed One Little Pill (2015), which reveals a startlingly simple new method to treat alcoholism that has been held back for too long. Adam then returned to the Himalayas to produce and direct a follow up to The Highest Pass titled The Road to Dharma (2017), an 11 episode Docu-Series created for television that takes us on an inquiry into what it means to be truly free. His latest project, HEAL (2017) dives into the science and journey behind changing one’s beliefs, thoughts, emotions and perceptions in order to heal any dis-ease.

As a freshman in college with a fiery personality on the soccer field, Schomer started meditating in nature in order to learn how to make the best use of his energy and become the most present and kind person he could possibly be. He decided to join the project for HEAL once he heard director and executive producer, Kelly Noonan’s passion and vision for the film. He was also drawn to the project as the film features some of Schomer’s personal heroes including Dr. Deepak Chopra, Gregg Braden, Dr. Bruce Lipton, Dr. Joan Borysenko and Anita Moorjani, just to name a few.

Since graduating from Cornell University, Schomer moved across the country and now resides in Santa Monica, California. He is also the president of i2i Productions, whose intention is to “unite through wisdom and entertainment.”
